Level of impact	Positive	Negative	Neutral
-----------------	----------	----------	---------

Social
Level of impact	Impact	Summary
Neutral	Gender Equality	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The proposed Government response indicates a future ANU Health Study looking that health risk associated with loose fill asbestos in domestic settings, would provide additional data with which to understand the health implications of exposure to loose-fill asbestos insulation in domestic environments.</li> <li>• To date, most studies looking at exposure to asbestos have been based on sample populations comprising workers in occupations that have been predominately male historically (e.g. construction and mining). This has limited the capacity of public health research to understand the implications of exposure to asbestos for women's health. A study of this type would build on the previous ANU health study published in 2016 and 2017.</li> </ul>

Positive	Health (Community and mental health)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>The proposed Government response acknowledges the experience of trauma.</li> <li>The Government response summarises existing activities that support people who have been at risk of exposure to loose-fill asbestos to access appropriate health services, including mental health services.</li> </ul>
