20/247 National Partnership on COVID-19 Domestic and Family Violence Responses

Summary of impacts:

COVID-19 has increased the vulnerability of many Canberrans.

While it has been critical for Australians to stay home to control the spread of COVID-19 and keep the community safe, for many women home is not a safe place to be.

Quarantine and self-isolation measures which are in place to restrict the spread of COVID-19 may contribute to isolating women and children in their homes with a perpetrator of violence. It is expected this situation will increase the risk of violence against women and their children. Other external stressors, such as health and economic concerns will compound this situation.

The National Partnership responds to increases in domestic, family and sexual violence as a result of COVID-19, and aims to strengthen the capacity of critical services to provide crisis support and accommodation for women and children experiencing domestic and family violence (DFV) and perpetrators of this violence.
